Things apparently impossible in the past are so commonplace today that we scarcely notice them. One science alone, that of curing disease, has remained longest in the mist of ignorance, pretention and despair. It is but fitting, therefore, that the beginning of this marvelous century should be marked by the discovery and control of a power so efficacious in its results as to completely overshadow all other achievements made in the art of healing in the past.

The Psychopathic specialists of Hartford have come to Bridgeport at control all ordinary ailments, but many of the so-called incurable and unhealable forms of disease as well.
